

Ohio Maple Resources

The Ohio Maple Producers Association <http://ohiomaple.org> serves all of Ohio's Maple Industry. They help you sell maple products while promoting the industry and Ohio's maple heritage. Ohio maple producers produce some of the finest pure maple syrup in the world! Like fine wines, pure maple syrup gets its flavor from the geographic region. Maple syrup produced in Northern Ohio has a different flavor than syrup produced in Southern Ohio. Regardless of where in Ohio, the Buckeye State's syrups offer a wonderful flavor that we know you will agree is some of the finest in the world!

Ohio State University hosts the Ohio State Maple blog <https://u.osu.edu/ohiomaple/> offering upcoming educational events, updates about ongoing research projects and articles from cooperating entities. All designed to give the producer as much information as possible.

National Maple Resources

There is an unending amount of information on making maple syrup on the web; some of it a lot better than others. Credible sources include information from the following sites:

- Current research into sap and syrup production at Maple Research.org. <http://mapleresearch.org/>. This searchable data base is maintained by the North American Maple Research Council and includes the most up-to-date science published in a variety of academic and general public sources.
- Proctor Maple Research Center of the University of Vermont – <https://www.uvm.edu/cals/proctor-maple-research-center> Established in 1946, Proctor is involved in maple research and extension.
- Cornell Maple Program - <https://blogs.cornell.edu/cornellmaple/> - This is an excellent site for education and outreach materials.
- The Maple News (<https://www.themaplenews.com/>) and The Maple Syrup Digest are hard copy publications that come out monthly (MSN) and quarterly (MD)
- Web pages for the North American Maple Syrup Council (<http://northamericanmaple.org/>) and the International Maple Syrup Institute (<http://www.internationalmaplesyrupinstitute.com/>)
- The Maple Trader (<http://mapletrader.com/community/>) – an online forum of questions, answers, and comments from the community of maple syrup makers.

The vendors listed below are known to sell equipment, help to layout collection systems and sometimes install maple systems in Ohio. There are also vendors here who can help with the woodland management part of being a producer. This list is not a recommendation, landowners need to do their due diligence when hiring a vendor.
